"Perfect for any young woman in your life (15-25) because of the messages of empowerment, understanding and optimism....this slender and beautifully illustrated volume is very much a "mom story" that so many of us can relate to." - Grown and Flown
"This beautiful little book is the collected art, wisdom, and humor of Becky Blades and includes what she failed to teach her daughters as they wound down their high school years. Here is a chance to let Blades nag your daughter for you." - Money
"Pithy recommendations about forgiveness, charitableness, being a good hostess, and accepting change would be valuable in their own rights, but the whimsical artwork renders the book all the more delightful... A perfect graduation gift for young women-but the advice is applicable to all." - Kirkus "I wish they had a book like this back when I graduated. No mother or father should send their child off to college or out in the world without it." - Says Me Says Mom "It is THE book you need to buy now, and add to it for your daughter, when thoughts occur to you! Do it now, and when graduation day comes, she'll have a VERY special memento from you, that she can pass on to HER daughter too!" - Bless Their Hearts Mom "A great book to give your daughter or niece or Godchild before heading off to college. " - Michigan Mom Living "With warmth, wit, and a hint of motherly sass, Blades blends short essays and her celebrated mixed-media art with advice on everything from love, life, money, friendship, etiquette, fashion-and yes, laundry. So order a copy for the graduating ladies in your life." - An Awesome and Amazing Life "I LOVED this book! Becky offers pieces of advice to her college bound girls that I want my daughter to know...Do Your Laundry or You'll Die Alone: Advice Your Mother Would Give If She Thought You Were Listening is the perfect companion for any parent of a high school senior." - Kicking It With Kelly

Becky Blades is a writer, artist, business strategiest, and philosopher of creative, adventurous living. Since selling her award-winning public relations firm, Blades has served on corporate boards, as a civic advocate for the arts and entrepreneurship, and as a consultant and mentor. Blades' blog, stARTistry.com, celebrates the art of beginning. She has started 2,865 projects and finished 127. Among the unfinished are two almost-launched daughters, proving her point that it's not what you finish, it's what you stART. She lives in Kansas City with her husband of 30 years and her Maytag front load washing machine.

Not only a perfect but beautiful graduation present. Every single piece of advice she gives to her daughter is just what every mom would like to give to her own daughter. From the day to day to the broad and existential lessons, the book knows exactly how to put words to the advice we would all want to give. You and your graduate won't be disappointed in any way with this book.

This book is great! Has some excellent advice, but in a good way. I bought this because of the reviews. I didn't want to lose track of it, as I thought I would keep it for two years and give it Tony daughter at her HS graduation. But the book has so many things she can learn from, I gave it to her now.

A great book for everyone, but especially teen girls. Much like "George Washington's Rules of Civility and Decent Behavior", it's just good information to live by. It teaches how to be "good", instead of successful, smart, happy, or entitled.

better words have never been spoken!

This book is FABULOUS... kind of written for daughters but applicable to sons, too!! Great advice for the recent grad or moving out on their own child!! LOVE IT!!

I love this book! Gave it to my daughter and friends as graduation gifts. Added my own advice throughout and in the back!

My daughter hopefully read it. Great advice though! Spot on!

Cute book, I'm going to give it to daughter in a year when she goes off to college .
