In more than 30 years of journalism, PAS PASCHALI has been an arts editor, travel writer and magazine publisher; he currently works as a freelance journalist for The Guardian. He is also a keen walker, and has led groups on long-distance walks in the UK and abroad. His first trip to Paris was in the Seventies, and since then he has revisited France countless times to explore its regions. In that time he has written many articles and contributed to a number of guides on the French capital. In the last 15 years he has divided his time between living in London and Paris. BRIAN ROBINSON was born and raised in Northern Ireland. He first visited Paris in 1969 on a family holiday and fell in love with the city. He studied Law at Sussex University's School of European Studies which required a year's study in France. During the Easter and Summer holidays he worked as a tour guide for American high school students across Europe but specialised in Paris. He currently works as a press officer for the British Film Institute in London and regularly travels on Eurostar to his Marais pie-a-terre. His favourite Sunday afternoon is a stroll through the antique markets of Clignancourt where he can be found hunting for 1950s French ceramics.

Excellent book for planning a trip to Paris! The book is laid out according to areas, with a detailed walk through each. It is a bit smaller than most guide books, with about 200 pages and nicely illustrated. Each area walk has a good map to follow and it is going to be very useful. A trip later this year will put it to good use. I am even considering dismantling the book and only carrying that day's walk with us! Have looked at many books and this is one of the most useful.

Great--what you would expect from NG>
