Tristan Rutherford has been a freelance writer for over a decade. His lucky first assignment took him to Nice and he's been based there ever since. He has visited over sixty countries and written about twenty of them for the Independent and the Sunday New York Times Travel Magazine.

Tristan also lectures on travel journalism at London's Central Saint Martins. He lives in Nice, France. Kathryn Tomasetti, US-born and Italian-raised, writes travel and food features for a variety of publications including The Guardian and The Times. Her library of holiday photos-snapped from as far afield as China, Albania and Chile-have been published by National Geographic and Time Out. Kathryn's favorite places in Provence are the pavement cafes of Avignon and the art-filled city of Arles. She resides in Nice, France.

OMG! I love these two authors...they are so funny. I had the opportunity to visit some cities along the French Riviera and this guide was so useful for my very brief travels. It gave me the essentials I needed and the main points of interest to cover in my short time in Nice, Monaco, Cannes, Mougins and Vence.

Concise, and easy to carry. My wife's new favorite

The authors clearly know this region so well. They led us to amazing restaurants and the itineraries section helped me plan a most marvelous trip without a hitch! I HIGHLY recommend this guide!!

The reason the edition copyrighted 2015 gets only two stars is that it lists the museums in Nice as having free admission and this blatantly false. They are 10€ each or a pass to several within 7 days for 20€. Do not rely on this guide book in Nice.
