Customer Reviews

I can't seem to write this review without spoilers, so please proceed with caution!Love Belvin has taken the cake with this one: answered all my questions, tied up loose ends, and gave some folks their just due. And fully and completely brought together two people who were destined to be as one.Let me start off by saying that I loved Ezra from the start of the series. He's arrogant, controlling, and demanding, but he has a good heart, an unwavering love for God, and unending devotion to Lex. He's extremely well-read and highly educated, but he knows nothing about relationships. Or bending his will to someone else's. But he learned in this book, didn't he? I love how accepting and open he was when his flaws and missteps were pointed out. The maturation process for both he and Lex was something to witness. Very well done, Love Belvin. I fell a little bit more in love with Ezra as he deals with the Mary situation. I had an idea of how things were going to end for Mary, but I had no idea of how Ezra would respond. His response was so real and made him so...human. I love that it threw him for a loop and had him in the wilderness for a minute. So authentic. Speaking of Mary, the world would be a much better place if we all poured into our children the positive affirmation that she poured into Ezra by saying, 'I believe in Ezra', and having him repeat it. That touched my heart. Even though she didn't always understand Ezra, she knew he was special and set apart, and loved him fiercely. And now on to Precious. I pretty much couldn't stand her from the very beginning, but by the end of this book, I found myself hoping that she would find happiness. Marva and Sylvester really did a number on her, and I was glad that she got away from them. It's awful when your mother is the one sending you down the wrong path. I loved, loved, loved, Ms. Remah! It's funny that I was curious about everybody's back story but hers, and she ended up having the most shocking (and sad) story out of everybody. I really liked that she and Ezra were able to establish a good relationship. I was so nervous throughout ILwE and BwE that she was gonna end up in that basement, and was tickled to find out that she knew what was up. Nyree continued to be a nasty piece of work in this book. I really wanted to see her get her ass whupped, but the public humiliation and the fact that her in-laws want her out of their family is good enough for me. Super glad that Lex finally saw the light concerning Rasul. The scene where he sets Lex up and almost gets taken out by Ezra was a whole trip. I went from mad to scared to hyped in less than 12 minutes. Glad he got to go back home and out of Lex's hair. Yay for Thaddeus and Lillian, ugh for Marva and Sylvester and kudos to Stent and Zo. Cannot wait for Trent's story!!! Excellence, pure excellence. Keep up the amazing work, Love Belvin!!!

WOW, This book is just...sighs Not gonna give a summary just wanted to touch on two parts that stood out to me (although there were so many). When he was explaining his time in India and the work he was doing, he was basically telling Lex he was a sex worker. No, he was not a prostitute but that was the industry he worked in and that really blew my mind. He has such a complicated relationship with sex and it could have went so very wrong especially because of his calling in life.

Instead he was honest with himself and asked God to send him a wife that he didn't have to hide it from, he could own and explore it with and that's what he got. Another one of my favorite moments is when he broke down on the pulpit right before he had to preach and the singer had to come and sing him out of his funk. For the first time since he'd accepted his calling to do God's work, in that moment he was so broken because of the state of his relationship with Alexis he didn't want to perform what he was called to do. That moment maybe more than anything expressed just how deeply he loved his wife that she could get him to a point, even for just a moment, that he had no interest in heeding God's calling for his life. Also Alexis is such a strong, resilient, incredible woman. If there was anyone who could teach Ezra how to love she was it. For her to find out her father was apart of the reason she was attacked and she still found a way to not hate him just speaks to how truly pure of heart she is. Last Also lol you always develop the secondary characters JUST enough that they enhance and not take from the main characters and story thank you for that so many writers just can't find the right balance. Love, you are truly a gifted and incredible artist please don't make us wait too long for your next book we're ready for it NOW lol Speaking of your next book I'm gonna go ahead and speak for everyone and tell you we miss Ezra and Alexis already wouldn't mind if you continue/revisited them SOON

I have never taken this long to write a review and it's because I really am in awe of the author's gift! I don't know if my words can adequately convey or express my thoughts and feelings about the book but suffice it to say, the book as is the author--in one word, stellar! Oh, the imagination and vision of this author to masterfully craft a story that intertwines hot topics like religion, spirituality, morality, abuse, adultery, self-love, bdsm, etc., and not compromise but giving diligence and great care to each is nothing short of amazing. It's not just the writing which was superb but it was the sheer talent of the Love Belvin to render us wrought, sated, and entranced by her pen. I kept shaking my head as I read because I was tripping off the fact that she was ministering to me and her other readers. When Ezra went through a life changing moment that I also recently experienced, it helped me along in my healing. I identified and felt his pain. Can fiction really minister, can fiction bring you to tears, can fiction stay with you long after reading the last word--well if Love Belvin is author, it most certainly can and will! She was born to do this, built for this, and anointed to carry it out. I am not a crazy fan/stan but I love me some Love Belvin and I will ride with her all day/every day!
